Decades before many civil rights organizations gained national notoriety for achieving desegregation during the 1950's and 60's, the Toledo chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, NAACP, had already accomplished many of those feats during the 1920's and 1930's, according to Dr. Kenneth Goings, chairman of the Department of African American and African Studies at Ohio State University. He spoke at the 100 year celebration of the chartering of the local NAACP on Saturday, February 22 in the McMaster Center of the Main Library in downtown Toledo.

Dr. Goings explained to the audience that
